When faced with what one of my friends called "an insurmountable debt," I questioned whether or not my actions would come back to nip at my tail. Would my latest student loan go directly to help native Turks rebuild the lives they once had? Although I would love to give thousands of dollars (and thus, my college education) to help those in need, I also realized that I just did not have the funds to do such a thing. When I made the impulsive and somewhat irrational bid of $5,000 for a purple Goshen College lanyard, I knew that there would be a community supporting me.

Immediately the reaction that I received was a little unexpected, uncommon if you will. After chapel, before I could sneak out, a number of people came up to me almost pleading to help. There were offers of money as well as commitments to helping with fundraisers. It only took an hour for one of my friends to get hooked up with a television interview.

From the start, students as well as community members went to the ATM's and opened their checkbooks. I was amazed at some of the cash donations I received. One afternoon I retuned to my room to find $500 in cash stuffed in an envelope on my desk. Such a staggering number of people gave so selflessly, desiring no recognition.

Of the many things I will take form this experience, the most important is my new realization of the love that is capable of being shared around the world, and specifically the ability of Goshen College to live out our faith. Only through the combined efforts of students, faculty staff and community was something of this magnitude possible.

Why a Mennonite women's conference? Growing in ppreciation of my Mennonite heritage and awakening to women's issues" were important parts of developing self- wareness and a sense of identity for me. The ntercollegiate Women's Conference provided space to cele- rate and explore these identity markers with others. We ocused on women's experiences, asserting Anabaptist wom- nhood in the world, bringing a variety of stories and inter- sts. From the college presidency to the rice fields of ietnam, we offer a unique voice in and outside the ennonite community. At the intersection of our faith tra- ition and feminism lies a unique perspective, one that we re learning to recognize and value. Through sharing ndonesian peanut sauce, learning to quilt, admiring art by C women, and listening to our stories, the women's confer- nce helped us focus on this crossroads and continue the ursuit of our voice.

Pax Americana? That, precisely, was the question that the planning committee for the March 4th teach-in on U.S. foreign and military policy wanted to address during a day-long event at Goshen College. The teach-in was planned by an eclectic group of students, community members, and staff from the Fourth Freedom Forum, all from various backgrounds and disciplines but all interested in the state of global relations perpetuated by the United States. The day began with keynote speaker Phyllis Bennis from the Institute for Policy Studies in D.C. She addressed issues of U.S. foreign policy ranging from the destruction of Iraq caused by ten years of sanctions, the "peace dividend" idea of the early 90's that failed to materialize, and the continued monetary gluttony of the U.S military. The rest o f the day was occupied by workshops on issues like the "drug war"in Latin America, the media, Mennonite global outlook etc., and two more plenary sessions, one on feminist perspectives on war and militarism and the last on the myth of humanitarian intervention. Overall, the day was an incredible success. More than 200 people attended (even at 8:30 in the morning!); five different colleges and universities were represented, and numerous peace groups brought materials to display. We left with not only a clearer understanding of the complexity of our government, and the injustice it causes, but also with the resources to work for an alternative.

This past April's protest against the economic policies of the IMF and World Bank brought to GC something that was occurring internationally: movement momentum! Following November's seminal actions on the streets of Seattle, many GCers were interested in being a part of the "mobilization for global justice" set for April 16 (A16).

Bringing together of 35 Goshen students from across the broad spectrum of "the left," we were united under a red and black banner of solidarity with the global by-products of the IMF and WB policies – the impoverished masses of the global south.

But this was no "bandwagon." Through speakers, videos and discussions, a teach-in and months of planning and organizing, our GC affinity group of "Goshen in Motion" proved its commitment and heart. Braving all-night drives, sardine sleeping arrangements and rats, GCers put their bodies on the line in the DC streets to make their choices

off campus houses

Lexicon to off-campus houses

by Sidney King (excerpted from The Goshen College Record)

What exactly is being squeezed at Squeeze House? Does Rubber House refer to what you think it does, and isn't it an oxymoron to have a party at Prude House? While houses named after their street addresses are readily understood, another group of houses bear more ambiguous names. To help the uninitiated navigate their way through the confusing and creative nomenclature and lore of GC's off-campus housing scene, Record has compiled a cursory guide to some of these houses and their distinguishing characteristics.

A.S.S.S.S. House (a.k.a. Across from South Side Soda Shop, 1119 S. Main St.)

A.S.S.S.S House is probably the off-campus student house with the richest, and certainly spookiest, lore. According to residents, the house has long been suspected of being haunted by the ghost of a woman who died in the dining room. Inhabitants have reported several incidents in which they have heard strange noises and voices in a seemingly empty house.

St. John's House (318 S. 3rd St.)

Named after its close proximity to St. John's Catholic Church, St. John's House enjoys campus-wide fame for its remarkable and varied furniture collection, which includes several couches and varieties of easy chairs, a spool, a Grecian urn, assorted sculptures, and a red light. The centerpiece of the collection is a knight sporting a full-sized suit of armor. The knight, aptly named St. John, is the house's patron saint, standing guard at the front door.

rm

Deuce House (902 S. 6th St.)

During the fall semester residents of Deuce house underwent the traumatic experience of having their Main Street dwelling condemned and destroyed by a wrecking-ball. "Even after a month, it's hard to think about," said choked-up Deuce house resident and senior Andrew Gascho. Residents moved into the new house off 6th St. and named it "The Deuce" in memory of their lost home.

Dam Green (704 Fair Oak Dr.).

Named because of its color and close proximity to the Goshen dam, Dam Green House is one of the few student inhabited houses that can tout itself as waterfront property. "From one of the bedrooms in the top-floor, you can sort of see part of the water," senior Rachel Glick said.

Rubber House

Jackson House

Gray-D House (923 S. Main St).

The house that scarcely needs an introduction, Gray-D house (named because of its color and location across from the former Red-D Mart convenience store) is legendary for its vibrant social gatherings. Earlier this year, four floor joists beneath the living room were fractured from the strain inflicted by over-zealous dancers. One of the joists broke a water line, and Gray-D residents went without water for six weeks, prompting wisenheimers among the student body to temporarily rename Gray-D House Stink-E House.

Fire House: opposite (513 E. Waverly)

Fire House's name can be traced to a fire that destroyed the garage adjacent to the house several years ago as the result of an untended cigarette. Fire House resident and senior Justin Shank also cites the frequent bonfires held in the backyard by former residents as a contributing factor to the name. Although current Fire Housers are doing their best at fire-preventing measures, they still heat it up, so to speak. "We definitely consider ourselves the house with the best-looking residents," confided Shank.
